Building

Building is the set of techniques and knowledge aimed at the design and construction of a structure, or more specifically of a building.

Etymology

The word building, like the word "edile" comes from the Latin aedile, in turn a derivation of aedes which means "house" or "dwelling", but also "temple". The word "building" has the same root aedes linked to the suffix ficium which means "to make", "to build", "to realize".

Description

Building and architecture

It is under the name of building that all those works, processes and interventions that aim to create, modify, repair or demolish a building fall. By construction we mean an essentially technical activity and a production process; it is a component of the architectural process and can be separated and easily distinguished from it. Architecture has a much more complex connotation of a simple fact building; his determination comes from the patient and meditated exercise of different disciplines poised between technique and art.
