BUSCA 4

"Urban planning is the science that studies urban phenomena in all their aspects having as its purpose the planning of their historical development, both through the interpretation, reorganization, rehabilitation, adaptation of already existing urban aggregates and the discipline of their growth, both through the possible planning of new aggregates, and, finally, through the reform and organization from scratch of the systems of connection of the aggregates with the natural environment. "It should represent what puts an end to an inexorable process of worsening of the conditions of the city and the territory under consideration and as the beginning of a virtuous process of their improvement"
